

FORGOTTEN IN HIS JAIL

THE SCOTCHMAN HOPES TO GET OUT AFTER EIGHT YEARS.

He Was a Rich Man When the Doors of Ludlow Street Jail Closed on Him, and Now His Friends Say He Has Not a Cent—Hells of a War Claim.

New York, Oct. 31.—The rector of Grace chapel, in one of his periodical visits to Ludlow street jail, he became acquainted with and deeply interested in Augustine R. Macdonald, generally known as the "old Scotchman," who has spent the last six years of an adventurous life behind iron bars. Lawyer William H. Arnoux, through sympathy for the old Scotchman's case, as related by the kind-hearted rector, volunteered to make an effort to get Mr. Macdonald released. Lawyer James H. Laird and James C. McEachern assisted him. They appeared before Judge O'Gorman in the superior court for that purpose. To oppose them were Gen. Charles E. Hovey, of Hovey & Dole, lawyers of Washington, D. C., and Thomas M. Wheeler.

Mr. Macdonald is a direct descendant of a historic Scotch family. His grandfather, Alexander Macdonald, the Laird of Glenaldale, was among the first to join the standard of Prince Charles Edward Stuart, was Capt. John Macdonald, of Glenaldale, who fled from Scotland to Prince Edward's island in 1772 to escape religious persecution. Mr. Macdonald was born in Charleston, Prince Edward's island, fifty-six years ago. He was educated in England. Among his college friends was Gen. Thomas Francis Magher.

He came to this country and studied law under Judge Charles at Boston, for a time. He went south and became a successful trader in tobacco and cotton. Just after the capture of Vicksburg, Macdonald was employed by President Lincoln to make an arrangement with the Confederate military authorities by which loyal citizens and neutral subjects of friendly foreign powers might buy cotton from southern factories, and hold it without fear of destruction by either Union or Confederate soldiers. Mr. Macdonald succeeded in his mission. He is said to have had about forty million dollars' worth of cotton transferred to him in trust in one day. He bought two million dollars' worth on his own account. He placed the whole lot under the protection of the British flag. About three million dollars' worth, including all his own, was destroyed by Union troops under Gen. Osborne in January, 1865.

The next events of consequence in Mr. Macdonald's life were related by Lawyer Wheeler. Mr. Macdonald, Mr. Wheeler said, was a subject of Great Britain. In 1869, while a resident of Cincinnati, he filed a petition in bankruptcy. Mr. Thomas J. Hovey was chosen his assignee. Among the assets he put in a claim of $300,000 against the government for cotton destroyed in several southern states. His attorney employed Hovey & Dole, of Washington to assist him in prosecuting his claim. He agreed, Mr. Wheeler said, to give Messrs. Hovey & Dole one-quarter of the amount recovered. A mixed commission awarded Mr. Macdonald $300,000. Mr. Macdonald, Mr. Wheeler said, refused to give Messrs. Hovey & Dole for their services. Hovey & Dole resorted to lawsuits to get the money. Their case was dismissed, and Macdonald received $300,000 through an order of the court. The law firm appealed to the general term, and the decree dismissing the case was reversed. In June, 1878, Macdonald was ordered to restore $50,000 to the register of the court, the receiver having been discharged.

Lawyer Wheeler says that Macdonald disappeared from Washington. It was decided that he had disobeyed the order of the court, and he was adjudged guilty of contempt. Six days were given him to restore the fund, and, on his failure to do so, his answer was stricken out. Then the fight was transferred to this district, where Mr. Macdonald was found. Hovey & Dole began an action in the superior court, charging Macdonald with the wrong, "taxing and detention of personal property. He did not put in an answer, and he was arrested and lodged in Ludlow street jail.

Mr. Wheeler said in conclusion: "Macdonald can get out of jail at any time. All we want to know want he did with that $300,000 he received. We do not want his body, as it is of no use to us."

Mr. Arnoux, in behalf of Mr. Macdonald, said that he had taken up the old Scotchman's case without expectation of fee or reward, but merely in the interests of justice. All that Macdonald wanted was an opportunity to defend himself, which he had neglected through ignorance of the law. He had been sufficiently punished. He would not have suffered longer imprisonment if he had been guilty of manslaughter. He would be a prisoner for life unless he were permitted to come forth and make a defense to the action. He could get his liberty; but liberty under certain circumstances, would be an acknowledgment of the justice of the claim against him. Mr. Arnoux claimed that the reversal of the order of the court paying the money to him could not affect his right to it. Judge O'Gorman received the papers in the case and reserved his decision.

Mr. Macdonald says that Hovey & Dole were engaged by Lawyer Meyers, of Memphis, without his (Macdonald's) consent. The expenses of his lawsuits and his long imprisonment have left Macdonald, his friends assert, without a cent.
